FAITHFUL PRACTICE IN THE NEW COMMONS
CIVIC

In our civic engagement, how do we learn to make decisions together, as opposed to participating in political culture wars that polarize?

FAITHFUL PRACTICE IN THE NEW COMMONS
EDUCATION

In our education, how do we create communities that are teaching in all contexts of our life together, as opposed to putting more pressure on overworked teachers?

The Art of Parish Renewal
April 19-20, 2013

For an end to Consumer Church.
The day of passively attending church events for individual self-help and entertainment must stop. It's time for faith communities that actively participate together in weaving a robust fabric of care in real places.

For an end to Colonial Mission.
The results of arrogant decisions that church leaders have made—decisions that affect communities where they are not members—have frightened us to inaction. It's time to reimagine mission through faithful presence and everyday friendship.

For the beginning of a New Parish Awakening.
Something wonderful is rumbling under the surface. Join practitioners from all over North America who are moving toward more local and embodied forms of being the church in everyday life.

CONFERENCE BRANDING

Gather at the Intersection of text, soul, & culture

At the intersection of Elliott & Wall in the heart of downtown Seattle, a few passionate dreamers have established an innovative, non-profit, and nationally accredited graduate school that is re-defining theological, psychological, and cultural training. Our embodied and relational approach prepares the whole person for their unique role in transforming the world as community leaders, artists, therapists, pastors, scholars, theologians, and activists.

PREVIEW

We live in a complex world. Faithful presence in that world demands wisdom—a way of being and interacting that is beyond knowledge, beyond technique, and beyond the same old answers.

At the intersection of text, soul, & culture, we develop the capacity for students to ask new questions, see through multiple lenses, and embody a more holistic way of relating to ourselves, each other, and the world. The Seattle School emboldens practitioners and leaders to be a dynamic presence and a voice of wisdom for a world in need of complex thinkers and healers.

Something is missing in theological education.

You.

Who you are is essential to the work you are called to do.

Traditional theological education focuses on knowledge and performance. Our embodied and relational approach prepares the whole person for their unique role in transforming the world.

2013 ANNUAL REPORT

What you hold in your hand is an essential part of what we do. It is not just a story that we tell about a year in our lives. It is a story of what we have done, what we have learned, and what we have discovered. It is a story of what we have done, what we have learned, and what we have discovered. It is a story of what we have done, what we have learned, and what we have discovered.

This annual report is a story of tables.

Tables are for sharing, conversation, and thoughtful reflection. Tables for learning, with all the joys, disciplines, and challenges involved in all good learning. Tables for meeting and connection. Tables for shared meals and shared lives. A restaurant table for the dinner part that government requires for the 100 members.

I have the courage of the table because I know that a good table is about the table, the people, the food, the conversation, the shared experience, the shared journey. It is not just a story that we tell about a year in our lives. It is a story of what we have done, what we have learned, and what we have discovered. It is a story of what we have done, what we have learned, and what we have discovered.

We care about words. We care about story.

We care about the table.

Kath R. Allen
Kath R. Allen, President

When we set the table we hope to never take for granted the beauty and grace that will unfold. Our mission of serving and ministering to the needs of the church, world, and culture is our hope. The generosity of our faculty, staff, students, alumni and community partners helps us realize our vision. 2013 marks a year of ministry, collaboration, and connection across necessary waters: business, research, and the care of our extended and long-term students.
